Cannes opener: Final Cut by Michel Hazanavicius comes with a new french title Coupez !

The Festival de Cannes supports the decision of French filmmaker Michel Hazanavicius and his partners to change the French title of his film, which will open the 75th festival. Originally, the film was called Z (comme Z) (Z, like Z), as a tribute to the genre film, it echoes. Since the letter Z has taken on a warlike meaning with the war of aggression waged against Ukraine by the Russian government, there can be no such confusion or ambiguity. The film has therefore...

Spring, seeing Hong Kong again--review by Vanessa McMahon

Directed by Benoit Lelievre, shortfilm “Spring, Seeing Hong Kong Again” (2022) is a love letter to the vibrancy and diversity of a Hong Kong that has been drastically hit for the last two years during the Covid pandemic, making the lively city unrecognizable during its struggle. Both in Mandarin and English, the film is narrated by New Zealand born Alex who moved to the city in 2000 and has felt so at home in the dynamic city that he raised his daughter there. Spring, seeing Hong Kong again: Review by Siraj Syed

Review by Siraj Syed How do you define a city? Or, rather, how do you re-define a city, after two years of a pandemic? Covid had varying casualties across the world, and Hong Kong had its share. The 5th wave of the deadly virus brought with it 20,082 new cases, while the total number of confirmed infections exceeded one million. That is a huge number, considering the city's population of about 7 million. But while the severe impact of the disease meant a toned down life-style, th...
